A Dakotan's Queer Place of Refuge from a Blizzard

the recent blizzard could be compiled, and all the queer and horrible incidents connected with it detailed, it would rank as the literary marvel of the nineteenth century, but it would require 10,000 pages to tell it.

When the great storm swept over that county Eric Johnson, a farmer near Plank inton, was watering his cattle some distance from his building. He used his utmost exertions to drive the cattle home, but without avail, as very shortly they, as well as himself, were exhausted.

Among the cattle was a very large ox, which soon became bewildered, and lay down to die close to where Johnson was floundering in the snow. At this moment Johnson, who was making frantic efforts to save himself, was seized with an inspiration which impelled him to quickly kill the ox, disembowled him, and crawl inside. After drawing the sides of the stomach together he was completely sheltered from the terrible storm by the warm carcass of the ox, and passed the night in safety and comfort.

tation. He discovered to his horror that the ox was frozen solid, his knife outside, and himself a secure prisoner. He kept shouting at intervals until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when his cries were heard by parties who were searching for his frozen body, and he was helped out of his hole, none the taken here. Preliminary steps for the formation of a corporation, whose object is the purchase and removal to this city of the famous Libby Prison of Richmond, Va., were taken here yesterday. The building is of red brick, three stories high and covered with an old-fashioned gable-roof.

It contains about 600,000 bricks. Competent architects say it can be taken down, removed to Chicago and rebuilt, just as it stands to-day. It will be taken down in sections, boxed up and brought by rail. When erected in Chicago the building will be surrounded by another building 200x150 feet, with a glass roof and on the opposite wall will be painted a panorama view of James river and the country beyond. Four hundred and thirty-one of the well known citizens are at the back of the project. The company will have a capital of $400,000, and all the stock has been applied for.

William H. Gray, who got up the scheme, says the building can be purchased for $23,000, and an option has been taken on it. It is also proposed to place in the building a collection of relics of the late war, and have panoramic views of the engagement between the Monitor and Merrimac and other battles.

 EASTMAN (Ga.), February 5th.—Living near James Pope, a negro of Longview, Dodge county, is his brother-in-law, who has a son, Richard Russell, 10 years old.

On Friday a negro gave Harrell a bottle of whisky and the lad got drunk. In his frenzy he determined to kill Pope's three children. The children helped him fill a kettle with boiling water and at his bidding stripped themselves of their clothes.

A child aged 4 years tried to resist, when Harrell seized him, and the young demon thereupon beat its brains out with a piece of iron and threw its body in the kettle.

The flesh of the children in the kettle was nearly boiled from their bones. The head of the third child was beaten almost to a jelly and it died during the night.

LONDON, February 5th.—The extreme gravity of the European situation is for the first time clearly shown by the simultaneous publication at Berlin and Vienna of the secret treaty of 1890.

Europe must be taken into his confidence. Europe has long known of the existence of the treaty. The Czar knew it, but Europe certainly, and the Czar perhaps, never knew how stringent was the demand.

No soldier believes that Russia is a match for both. An attack by Russia can only be the act of a madman. Yet the publication of this treaty puts the Czar in this dilemma: he must either attack or yield to the
